

Religious, Neighborhood and Community Organizations

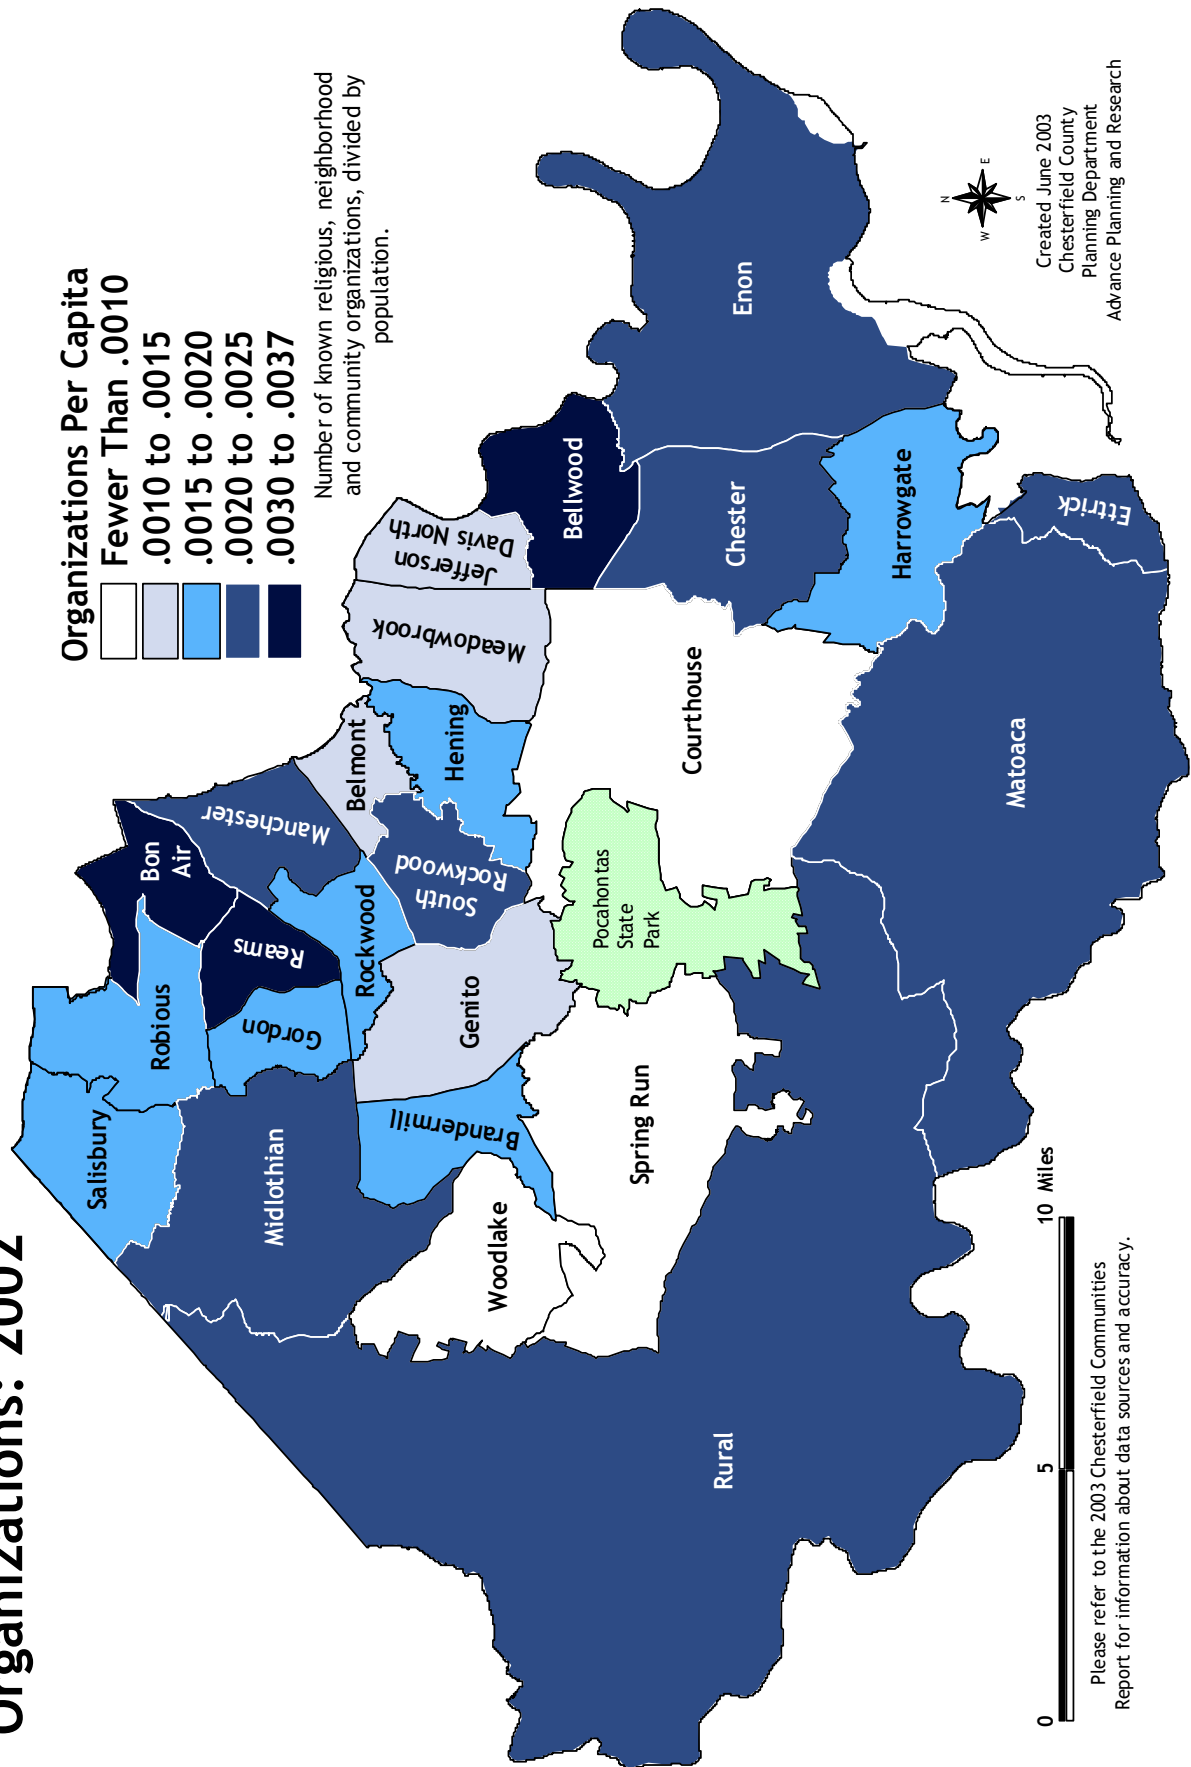

Church in Bon Air

Communities are stronger when neighbors know each other and are able to respond to community problems together. Religious, neighborhood and community-based organizations provide residents many opportunities to participate in the civic life of their community.

Accurate data about the presence of such organizations is difficult to find. Data is especially sparse for organizations without permanent locations, such as churches meeting in temporary facilities. This report combined a variety of separate data sources in an attempt to locate established organizations. Almost 500 organizations were found countywide that own improved property and/or actively participate in public activities.

Religious, Neighborhood, and Community Organizations: 2002

Please refer to the 2003 Chesterfield Communities Report for information about data sources and accuracy.